Current Status (in a Nutshell)

- Strong, unwavering commitment to e-first access strategy/delivery workflow—i.e., provide digital copies of print books in first instance.
- Library positioned itself to meet increased demand for resources by on-campus and off-campus learners (about half of ‘residential’ students fully online)
 - Relying on increased purchase of ebooks and on community resources, such as HathiTrust/JSTOR/Internet Archive.
 - Established scanning and access process for local copies of in-copyright digitized books.
 - Print delivery available via locker pickup.
- Transitioned research and instruction to remote support;
- Positioned for additional on-site services (such as study spaces) or ‘ramping down’ while still maintain essential services.

General Fulfillment Strategies

- Safety of employees and patrons topmost concern.
 - E-first policy (though not e-only)
- Continue ETAS until Level 5 in Restore Illinois Plan
 - Provides digital access to roughly half of our print holdings.
- No electronic access?
 - We attempt to purchase digital version
 - If content is still not available in digital form (or if only a portion of a work is needed) we will scan content locally.
 - Partial works: retrieved by owning unit staff and routed through ILL/DD for scanning and digital delivery
 - Entire works: routed through the Library's Preservation Services unit, who may route through the Internet Archive or scan items themselves.

Uncomfortable Comments . . .

Subject: “Re: Electronic Books are an insufficient resource for Dissertation writing”

“I guess large research institutions are becoming more like gated communities as they deal with the pandemic.”

“This must have been what it felt like to conduct research in Latin America during the 19th Century”

“[A]lso, and here I want the library to hear this loud and clear, a book on-line is basically useless.”

“There are in history what you could call ‘plastic hours’. Namely, crucial moments when it is possible to act. If you move then, something happens.”

- Gershom Scholem, quoted by George Packer, “America’s Plastic Hour is Upon Us”

2011 Constitutional Convention Ballot Proposal

“With the advent of HathiTrust—a community-supported repository of digitized texts – the opportunity exists for our institutions to not only work together to profoundly influence the landscape in which we provide access to cultural resources but to profoundly influence the mechanisms by which we ensure persistence of the printed record.”

“HathiTrust’s massive collection of digitized books and its aggregation of print holdings information from its Partners provide the opportunity to take a leadership role in securing an enduring commitment to maintaining a shared print collection on behalf of the research library community. Leadership and coordination in this effort are essential; without them, decisions about print retention will be made on a local level in response to local space and financial pressures, without commitments, and in a way that does not reflect the shared values research libraries hold manifested in our collective desire to preserve our printed literature.”
